Permanent Link to Antenova's Raptor antenna pinpoints location to within centimeters

2021/05/31

Photo: Antenova Antenova Ltd. has developed a new positioning antenna that it says can pinpoint a location to within centimeters in the GNSS bands. Antenova is a manufacturer of antennas and RF antenna modules for machine-to-machine and the internet of things. Antenova will be showing samples of the Raptor antenna at the Consumer Electronics Show, being held Jan. 8-11 in Las Vegas, in booth #2220 in the Westgate hall. The Raptor antenna utilizes the L2 1200-MHz satellite band that recently became available for civilian use. The addition of the L2 frequency band combines multi-band satellite signal reception and GNSS correction data. This helps to mitigate position errors, greatly improving accuracy, especially in urban areas, the company said. As well as improving tracking, the L2 band is beneficial for UAVs, drones, autonomous vehicles, agriculture, grid mapping and other emerging applications, Antenova added. The antenna is the latest addition to Antenova's lamiiANT range of rigid FR4 antennas which are designed for easy insertion onto a printed circuit board (PCB). The antenna itself is very small. It is a GPS single-feed antenna in surface mount (SMD) form, measuring 16.0 x 8.0 x 1.6 millimeters, suitable for small PCBs within all kinds of small electronic devices. "This is an outstanding antenna, because it achieves the same precision as a much larger, heavier ceramic patch antenna, but in a very compact SMD part," said Colin Newman, CEO of Antenova. "A ceramic antenna would need to be 35 x 35 millimeters to achieve a similar level of accuracy and performance." Raptor is supplied in tape and reel for ease in high-volume manufacturing applications.
